

How to Use These Printables:

Giving your child small, daily chores encourages personal responsibility, creative thinking, team work and helps them to develop greater confidence. In linking their allowance to a completed chore chart, they begin learning the value of money and basic money management skills.

Chore Chart:

Each week, print out a new Chore Chart for your child. Let the child put stickers on the chart as they complete each chore. Each day, have your child choose an 'Extra Chore' stick to complete and write the task into the empty box.

At the end of each week, review the completed chore chart with your child before giving them their allowance.

**For older children, discuss with your child how much the 'Extra Chore' will be worth before they get started.*

Money:

Print and cut out the Play Money to use in place of real currency when paying your child their weekly allowance.

Extra Chores:

Print out and attach the extra chores to wooden sticks, and put the sticks into a jar or basket. Each day, your child can pick an 'extra chore' to complete in addition to their daily to-dos. You can decide how much monetary value you put on the extra chores, depending on how big of a task it is.

For chore sticks with a 'blank' on them, you or your child can choose which room to complete the chore for.

Find a chore: Let your child find something around the house that needs doing, and ask them what they think the completed chore is worth.

Find a chore bonus: Ask your children to work together to find and complete a chore around the house.
